

Copyright & Privacy Policy

The British Aerobatic Association Limited claim copyright on all words and certain graphics contained within this electronic domain. In particular we own the copyright to the British Aerobatics and previous BAeA logos, and all variations on this theme, including colour variations and encircling words and motifs. The logo may be used to illustrate links back to the BAeA web on the Internet. If unsure as to other uses, please contact the BAeA.

We, like many others who use the Internet, have obtained some graphics from other sites, where they have been offered for general use at no charge, or where specific permission was made by verbal agreement. We have assumed any such use or agreement has been offered by those authorised to make such an offer, and for these we claim no copyright. All articles offered for publication here will be considered to be copyright of the BAeA, or to have been placed in the custody of the BAeA for copyright protection.

Should anyone feel aggrieved that we may, in some way, have transgressed the limits of reproduction we ask that in the first instance you email us at info@aerobatics.org.uk or alternatively write to us at the address below:

Disclaimer

Nothing in this electronic domain constitutes instruction on how to perform aerobatics or fly any aircraft, without first completing an appropriate training course from a suitably qualified individual or organisation. Where advice on the techniques of flying, and in particular aerobatic flying, is offered, it is done so on the basis that such information will only be applied by those qualified and able to attempt such techniques.

The British Aerobatic Association, its directors and members, will not be held liable in any claim arising from the use, whether appropriate or not, of any technique or instruction offered here.

Aerobatic flying should never be attempted by anyone without first undergoing a recognised course such as the AOPA certificate of competency in aerobatic flying or an equivalent rating.

Data Protection and Privacy

The British Aerobatic Association collects and uses personal data for the purposes of:

- Membership administration
- Contest entry and organising officials
- Reimbursement of expenses and other charges in accordance with the Association's Rules
- Publication and publicity of contest and event results and participation
- Lottery ticket sales and fund raising
- Merchandise sales
- General communication and enquiries, including email

Personal information is collected, stored, amended or deleted in accordance with the data protection legislation in force at the time in the United Kingdom.

Personal information collected by the BAeA is not used for commercial purposes, nor is it disclosed or sold to third party organisations for commercial gain.

All reasonable efforts are made to secure and preserve any information held by officers and officials of the organisation.

Personal data will only be disclosed to the authorities where it is essential for safe and legal conduct of official business.

If you would like a copy of any personal information the BAeA holds about you, you would like such information amending or correcting, or you require the information to be deleted, please contact:

Email: chairman@aerobatics.org.uk or write to: British Aerobatic Association Limited, 84 Green End Road, Sawtry, Cambridgeshire. PE28 5UZ.

If, after communication with the BAeA, you still have a concern or complaint about the way in which your personal data is managed, please contact the Information Commissioner's Office: <https://ico.org.uk/concerns/>
